

Introduction

In the last section you learned how to examine whether model assumptions are valid. Then you learned how to evaluate the model for goodness of fit, multicollinearity and the presence of influential observations. But what if your model is not a good fit, violates some of those assumptions, or has some other problem? In this section you learn remedial measures that you can use to address problems with your model.