Collective Inference

A third and final component of a social network learner is a collective inference procedure. Given a network initialized by a local model and a relational model, a collective inference procedure infers a set of class labels or probabilities for the unknown nodes. Some popular examples are Gibbs sampling, iterative classification, PageRank, relaxation labeling, and loopy belief propagation.

Social Network Analytics

Close